

Jane Chadsey

Jane Chadsey is an education leader committed to creating an effective education system in which young people learn in meaningful and inspiring ways, and classrooms are places they want to be. She is the Vice President of Educurious, a non-profit dedicated to creating solutions to today's most perplexing education challenges (www.educurious.org). At Educurious, Jane designed a Professional Learning System for teachers implementing innovative learning designs employing a blended learning model of face-to-face and virtual learning experiences. Before joining Educurious she was the Director of Curriculum and Instruction in the Renton School District, where she led a staff of 20 instructional coaches and supervised curriculum, professional development and instruction. Prior to that, she was the Director of Instructional Services for Seattle Public Schools. Jane started her career as an elementary classroom teacher in Seattle where she was awarded the 1999 Presidential Award for Mathematics and Science Teaching.
