

Patti Davenport

Patti is an instructional coach with the Center for Teacher Effectiveness, committed to equipping educators with practical, useful strategies and techniques they can use immediately to help more students succeed in the classroom. Patti is a principal consultant for Equipping Educators and specializes in classroom management and differentiated instruction. She has extensively studied the power of healthy appropriate relationships in the academic setting and the importance of engaging students with a variety of opportunities to respond to instruction. Her primary focus is to help teachers and administrators create classroom and school culture that engages all students with their unique strengths and holds them accountable for learning. After each of her trainings and presentations, participants leave feeling equipped to maximize instructional time and encouraged by the opportunity to deliver more of the content they love.
