Trauma Transmission from Students to Teachers

In addition to experiencing their own primary trauma separate from the schoolyard, teachers can also feel the effects of students' trauma the pandemic.

Bandwidth Is the Key to Energy, Effectiveness, and Engagement

The No. 1 predictor of how people rate their personal brain "fuel tank" is whether they believe their workplace supports them in keeping that tank full.

WSASCD is excited to highlight When Netflix Isn't Enough: Fostering True Recovery for Educators, authored by Allison Rodman is the founder of The Learning Loop, an ASCD faculty member, and author of Personalized Professional Learning: A Job-Embedded Pathway for Elevating Teacher Voice (ASCD, 2019). Alissa Farias is an elementary assistant principal with Tacoma Public Schools and an ASCD Emerging Leader. Shannon Szymczak is a middle school English language arts teacher with Tacoma Public Schools and an ASCD Emerging Leader. Follow them on Twitter @thelearningloop, @laprofefarias, and @bookemshanno.

The authors argue that, amid the stresses of their jobs, educators are expected to continuously "recharge for survival" rather than being given opportunities for authentic recovery. To make teaching jobs more sustainable, they write, schools need to rethink the way they conceive of time, space, and connection, and attend to the social-emotional needs of educators as much they do for students.

Does the idea of "recharging for survival" (as opposed to authentic recovery) sound familiar to you? How much is it a part of the culture of your school?
